MacDONALD IN PARIS TO PUT FRENCH FEAR AT REST

No Reason For Storm Over Bids To Parley, He Says

DENIES CHARGES

See Hand Of Mischief Maker; No Channel Tunnel

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, July 7.—Mr. Ramsay MacDonald comes to Paris tomorrow to confer with M. Herriot.

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, July 7.—The French views on reparations will be explained before the London Conference is held.

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, July 7.—The Minister of Foreign Affairs has issued the following statement: Mr. MacDonald has informed the Premier that he will come tomorrow, Tuesday, to Paris to continue conversations.

M. Herriot, in the course of a speech at his native town of Troyes, declared: "It is my duty to secure peace which is threatened by certain nations and in the search for peace not to let the rights of our country be curtailed. Difficulties remain to be overcome. Our method is to seek what brings together and not what divides."

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, July 7.—The Executive Committee of the German People's Party has passed a resolution stating that the experts' report is unacceptable without the evacuation of the occupied territory and the suppression of the Customs frontier.

The Daily Telegraph says that Mr. MacDonald's suggestions have been badly interpreted by the Reich.

(Reuter's Service)

London, July 7.—In the House of Commons today, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, announced that the Government had decided against construction of the Channel tunnel.

The Prime Minister also announced his intention to visit Paris tomorrow on the proposal of the French Premier, M. Herriot, and to return on Wednesday.

Mr. MacDonald declared that there was absolutely no foundation whatever for the storm which had arisen regarding the invitations to the Conference in London on July 16. He pointed out that the communications made to Belgium, Italy, Japan and the United States were merely a repetition of the British suggestions concerning the task of the forthcoming Conference, which he had already submitted and fully discussed with the Belgian Minister and M. Herriot at Chequers. These suggestions had at the same time been embodied for purposes of record in a semi-official communication from the permanent head of the Foreign Office to the permanent head of the French Foreign Office. No communication in that connection had been made either by or on behalf of the British Government to the German Government. The communication would be published with a more lengthy one later.

The Prime Minister said that he was not going to allow, if he could help it, any mischief-maker on either side of the Channel to destroy the prospects of an Anglo-French settlement. It was too horrible to contemplate. The charge that the British Government was trying to abolish the Reparations Commission was false. He hoped that, if an agreement could be reached on the experts' report, it could be supplemented by an inter-Allied agreement that in the event of wilful default by Germany after she had accepted the experts' report the Allies should stand shoulder to shoulder in pressing her responsibilities upon her; but who was going to decide in respect of the experts' report whether Germany was wilfully defaulting or not? Any agreement, he declared, would be additional to, not substitution for anything proposed by the Versailles Treaty.

Mr. MacDonald emphasised that Belgium, Italy and Japan were all satisfied at the form of the invitation. He declared that the complaint against it was made for

ROBBER BAND IS ROUTED IN HARD HAICHOW BATTLE

General Pei's Troops Have Desperate Struggle With Outlaws

(China Press Correspondence)

Haichow, July 2.—A desperate battle took place 15 miles west of here on June 28 when General Pei Pao-shan's troops discovered the whereabouts of a band of robbers numbering about thirty and among whom were no less than four of the most noted bandit leaders in this part of China. General Pei and his troops have been especially on the lookout for these leaders for a long time, and have repeatedly run them out of the country. But each time the temptation to return was too great and at last the bandits pulled off one stunt too many.

For after an audacious raid on a country village near here last week soldiers and bandits came face to face and the long drawn out feud came to the final settlement. Both sides had good weapons and plenty of ammunition. One of the bandit leaders has been recently to Shanghai and brought back, from Shanghai gun runners, a supply of both to last many months. But the desperadoes numbered only thirty men and the soldiers numbered many times that.

So the bandits retreated, fighting as they went, till they came to a village where there were a number of mud houses surrounded by a mud wall. Into this protection they rushed, closing the gates behind them and hiding back of the mud walls. The soldiers came close behind and entirely surrounded the village rapidly throwing up such earthworks as were necessary to protect them and the seige began. For a time it seemed impossible to dislodge the bandits and things hung fire till the soldiers saw that something must be done if they were to settle then and there the many old scores against their enemies. So then four soldiers volunteered to rush to the walls under cover of rifle fire and, climbing to the top, set fire to the dry straw roofs of the village. This they actually did and then the real fight began. The bandits saw that they were trapped and evidently resolved to sell their lives as dearly as possible. But the odds were greatly against them and one by one they were shot, mostly in the head as they peeped over the walls to fire their rifles. Finally those remaining alive inside the walls were forced out by a rush on the part of the soldiers and all were killed but six who managed in some way to escape. Among the soldiers four were killed and a number received wounds but were not seriously hurt.

One of the bandit leaders escaped. The other three were killed, among them the most desperate and able robber chief who has been known about here for many years. A most through hunt is being conducted for these who escaped.

General Pei has now destroyed all but one—the man who escaped—of the bandit leaders who have been causing this district so much trouble for so many years. Both General Pei and the people of this district are to be heartily congratulated.

Highest Floods For Years Inundate Nanchang Area; Thousands Made Homeless

Highest Water In Generation Smites District And Threat Of Famine Looms Ominously

(China Press Correspondence)

Nanchang, July 4.—The floods that have been coming down from the mountains on the Southern border of the province along with the accumulation of water from a very wet Spring have caused the worst floods in a couple of generations.

Water has been rising steadily until it has gotten to the stage where the oldest resident says, "Never in my time was it as high."

The water here in Nanchang has flooded over half of the city and certain places around the lake and all along the water front, which covers, two sides of the city, which is triangular in shape. Hundreds of families have had to abandon their homes but some of them have only moved to the second story in the hopes that the water will soon recede. Rice has gone up in price a dollar and eighty cents per picul and the prospect is that it will soon be a great deal higher.

Yesterday the Chamber of Commerce committee and Dr. Geo. T. Blydenberg of the Nanchang Hospital and Mr. Ben. H. Schmidt of the Y.M.C.A. made an eighty li trip of inspection into the country for the purpose of ascertaining the damage done.

Sampans are everywhere in the city and after a half-hour's trip through streets of water, where we had to crouch down in the Sampan to keep from getting hit by overhanging and crumpled roofs and signs, we finally got into the Gan river, which is a raging torrent, and by good boatmanship we managed to hook onto our forty-foot launch.

Going up the Gan River the havoc of the flood is terrible to see. Houses in water up to the eaves and many of them ready to crumple when the water goes down. Temples which are set in the beauty spots all but covered and on several occasions we saw idols floating in the water, the people having had no time to remove them.

As soon as possible we cut off from the river to get out of the current and traversed the side country over rice paddies covered from ten to twelve feet with water. On the high banks we found the people huddled together under the poorest of improvised grass and dirt shelters. At present they still have a little rice but nothing else.

We saw but one body floating in the water and that was a little child of three or four.

One place we saw two boys and a water buffalo on the top of a rice straw pile, but there were sampans near to take them off.

At the village of Shih Cha about sixty li above Nanchang we stopped to talk with the people. We learned that the dike had broken on the second and had given them little relief since the water had piled up there ten feet above its present level. This is a village of 600 families and 360 shops, with every shop out of commission. Only one person had been killed here, and that a boy of six, who was killed by the collapse of a temple wall. This city alone had lost about 3,000 don of rice and it is now too late for them to plant another crop. Here they were trying to dry out the water soaked rice and wheat but it will only make them sick if eaten. One old man when asked whether he had seen higher water said, "I have never seen it as bad, and my father has never either?"

The best reports we can get is that the same conditions prevail as far up on the Suei as Sweichow, on the Gan as far up as Gan Chow, and on the Fu as far as Fuchow. Above these places we have no word. It is estimated that the damage done below here is worse since the three rivers join above and throw a terrific volume of water below Nanchang.

The lives lost are comparatively few in number but there is sure to be a rice famine and the property loss is impossible of estimation at present.

All are hoping that the good weather of today will last so that the water will go down quickly. If more rain comes the possibility of the loss of homes will be terrible.

Altogether the people are facing the thing bravely and will in all probability get busy and repair the damage as soon as possible. The dikes are down in many places and the volume of water rushing through the cuts is increasing the dimculty of repair.

Tomorrow the above committee will make an investigation of the lower sections. Rice is being given out to the most destitute by the local Chamber of Commerce, but this sort of relief will have to be put on a much larger scale in a few days.

The trains have not been running between here and Kiukiang for the past four or five days as the track is submerged. Telephone and telegraph communications have been cut also. Nanchang is marooned but for the present is making her troubles very bravely.

MacLaren And His Aides Get Royal Welcome In Tokio

(Eastern News Agency)

Tokio, July 8.—Squadron Leader MacLaren and his party arrived here today from Kasumigaura amid an enthusiastic welcome by many officials and private persons. At the station the Aviation Society of Japan presented a bouquet to the British flier. After a short rest at the British Embassy Squadron-Leader MacLaren called on the Minister of Communications, who presented souvenirs to the Aviator and members of his party.

His Royal Highness, Prince Kuni, President of the Aviation Society, presented medals to the fliers, who later were entertained at a garden-party in the premises of Baron Iwasaki. It is understood they will attend a dinner-party to be given in their honor tonight by the British Ambassador.

Unveil Tablet To British War Dead

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, July 7.—In the presence of the Marquess of Crewe, Field Marshal the Earl of Ypres, Major-General Sir Fabian Ware, Vice-Chairman of the Imperial War Graves Commission, and many Allied officers and British and French spectators, the Prince of Wales, accompanied by Prince Henry and President Doumergue, today unveiled a tablet at Notre Dame in memory of the British dead in the war, erected by the Imperial War Graves Commission as representing the whole Empire. The various parts of the Empire shared the cost proportionately to the number of dead from each.

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, July 7.—The Prince of Wales this morning unveiled at Notre Dame de Paris a tablet with the following inscription: "The United Kingdom to the glory of God and to the million British combatants, who fell in 1914-1918 and are resting on the soil of France". The President of the Republic, the Ministers of War and Pensions, Cardinal Dubois, and Generals Gouraud, de Castelnau and Mangin were present at the ceremony. The Prince of Wales and the President of the Republic were enthusiastically cheered by the Parisian crowd. The Prince of Wales then visited the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

This morning he handed to the President of the Republic an autograph letter from King George, saying: "On the occasion of the unveiling of the tablet, I desire to repeat on the behalf of all my people to the French people that by creating in 1922 British military cemeteries in France there exists for all those wearing morning the consolation of knowing that France surrounds these sacred places with respect and affection. The living bond uniting the two nations will not be weakened by time".

Blister, Sustained At Tennis, Results In Poisoning

(Reuter's American Service)

Washington, July 7.—President Coolidge's sixteen-year old son, Calvin died today following an operation for blood-poisoning. The deceased scratched and blistered his foot when playing tennis a fortnight ago with his elder brother, John, at the White House. His illness imposed a heartbreaking strain on his parents, who have been almost hourly at his bed-side since Saturday. Blood transfusion proved unavailing.

(Reuter's American Service)

Washington, July 7.—President Coolidge's son took a sharp turn for the worse this evening.

(Reuter's American Service)

Washington, July 7.—President Coolidge's son, Calvin, had spells of sinking throughout the night. He was thrice reported to be near death, but was comfortable in the morning. Blood transfusion was resorted to, to which the patient reacted well.

Says Bolsheviks Fear Labor More Than Conservatives

(Reuter's Service)

London, July 7.—The silence regarding the Anglo-Russian negotiations, which was beginning to be regarded in some quarters as ominous, was partly broken in the House of Commons tonight in the debate on a motion by Sir A. Steel-Maitland (Conservative), complaining that the Government had failed to fulfil their promise to keep Parliament informed of the march of events.

Mr. Arthur Ponsomby, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said that he hoped to submit the outcome of the conference before the summer recess, but it was difficult to deal with the matter fully at the present critical stage, just as it was reaching the last three weeks, when it had picked up various threads and was trying to come to an agreement. He said that those old treaties with Russia, which were to be continued, had been revised and would be ready for signature.

Referring to Soviet press attacks, Mr. Ponsonby declared that the Bolsheviks were more afraid of the Labor Party as a bulwark against Communism than they were afraid of the Conservatives (cheers and laughter).

The debate was adjourned until Thursday.

Situation Better In Morocco, Report

(Reuter's Service)

Madrid, July 7.—A communique states that the general situation in Morocco has improved. Strong reinforcements have arrived at Melilla and Tetuan from Spain. The besieged position at Cobadarsa has been relieved. The enemy has retreated in disorder, leaving many dead and wounded. The Spanish troops lost about 100 men.

Calles Victor In Mexico, Is Claim

(Reuter's American Service)

Mexico City, July 7.—Supporters of General Calles claim an overwhelming victory in the Presidential election. They assert that in 15 out of 28 States of the Republic he polled 90 per cent. of the votes cast. Owing to disorders the results will not be known for some weeks. The rival electors stormed some of the polling booths in Mexico City and carried off the voting urns. The followers of General Flores now demand that the election in such districts be declared void.

BOLD HOLD-UP WITH PHONEY GUN STIRS THE BUND AT NOON

Chinese Of Good Family Made Desperate By Losses

BLAMES 'MOVIES'

Sees $6,000 Loot As Way Out Of Personal Losses

Equipped with a broken revolver, loaded with paper and with the bullets camouflaged by a veneer of tinfoil from cigarette packets, a determined Chinese youth held up a bank messenger on the Bund yesterday shortly before the noon hour and created a near riot which plugged Foochow Rood where developed a cram of humanity, while police whistles resounded and officers and civilians dashed frantically up and down.

The Cooke in charge of the funds left the Commercial Bank of China 7 The Bund and started for the Chartered Bank shortly before 10 a.m. yesterday. When he was on the verge of entering the Chartered Bank, just before the North China Daily News Building, he was accosted by the accused, who demanded that the blue cloth sack, containing $6,000 in notes, be turned over. The messenger despite the threat of a presented revolver, dissented, whereupon the accosted man shrilled for [illegible] and the chase was on.

The would-be highwayman was captured by Chinese Police Constable 1155, who rushed up from the Customs Jetty and collared the man at the height of the chase.

Previous to this there were a number of developments. The accused, it seems, according to investigation, left his place of employ—at the Za Hsin Shun Government Contractors, Iron Merchants and Ship Chandlers company at A-116 Broadway and went to the North China Daily News Building to meet a friend. Failing to meet the friend, he cruised south, and shortly met the man with the blue cloth bag containing the $6,000 in notes.

Thrusting a revolver into the abdomen of the carrier, the accused, it is reported, ordered the handing over of the currency, under penalty of death. The coolie, instead of acting along accustomed lines, started an outcry.

"Jang Dau, Jang Dau," he cried. And the robber fled southward. Sikh No. 200 joined the chase and was quickly supplemented by Chinese Police Constables 198 and 322—and a host of civilians. Switching on the Bund near the Customs Shed, the fugitive was collared at the telephone booth by C.P.C. 1155, who was on duty at the jetty and was attracted by the whistles.

A search of the captive brought forth the defective revolver—the hammer would not work and there was no chance of a shot from the weapon. In the meantime C.P.C. 322 had come up with a long-bladed knife which the fugitive had thrown away and another knife was later found in the effects of the accused.

The would-be highwayman is said to be the son of a prominent Chinese drug store merchant in the Chinese City and shortly after his apprehension a lawyer appeared and stated that he was there on behalf of the firm employing the accused. The father, it is stated is a highly respected merchant.

The revolver which was flourished, on examination proved to be a broken weapon. The hammer was loose from the hammer-spring, which was broken, and the trigger was out of line. Nevertheless, the cylinders had been stuffed full of paper and the ends had been veneered with lead foil—to simulate bullets—as was brought out by Detective Sub-Inspector Hunter immediately after the man was grabbed.

CHINESE CHARGE SOVIET WITH MALTREATMENT

Memorandum Enumerating 11 Complaints Is Sent To The Press

Grievances of Chinese in border towns occupied by the Reds and those residing under Russian Jurisdiction were set forth in a memorandum issued by the Kalgan Commercial Organisations a copy of which has just been received by The China Press. The organisations have sent their own delegate, Mr. Wu Kwan-seng, to Peking to lay their claims before the Bureau of Sino-Russian Affairs, which begins its parley with Soviet Russia in the middle of this month.

The memorandum enumerates the following complaints:

1.—Taxes on Chinese goods are not fixed. As high as 300 percent is charged for taxation. For instance, the pongee silk produced by Shantung and Honan costs only about eight or nine dollars per piece, yet the tax chargable is $36.

2.—No Russian manufactured goods are allowed to be imported into the cities bordering Russia and Outer Mongolia. Such alleged offences are punishable either by fine or imprisonment or both.

3.—A head tax is raised on each Chinese firm in Russian territory, amounting to $1,000 a year.

4.—There are other extraordinary taxes imposed on Chinese merchants in Russia, amounting to $300 to $500 a year.

5.—In traveling, Chinese are required to secure passports at a cost of $4 per month.

6.—Chinese possessing land in Russia have to pay exorbitant land taxes, of which the rate is by no means regulated.

7.—All Chinese residents in Russian territory must secure passports, for which a fee of $12 per year is paid for each.

8.—On the 9th of February, 1920, Russians occupied Kiachta and Mameicheng and removed all the movable properties belonging to Chinese living in these cities into Russian territory. Then they set fire to the empty buildings.

9.—The Chinese residents in Kiaochta numbering about 5,000, were sent by the Red Government to Moscow and other Russia towns to do hard labor.

10.—The loss by Chinese merchants through the fall of the rouble was incalculable.

11.—No protection is being given to Chinese residents in Outer Mongolia before China formally takes over the territory.

McADOO VOTE DROPS TO 333, BUT DEADLOCK IS UNBROKEN

Convention Adjourns After 87th Ballot In Respect To Coolidge

DELEGATES FREE

Voting More Independent, But End Is Not Yet In Sight

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, July 7.—At the 87th ballot Mr. McAdoo slumped to 333½ votes, Governor Smith securing 361½ votes, Mr. Ralston 93 votes, Mr. Glass 71 votes and Mr. Davis 60½ votes. The Convention after the ballot adjourned until Tuesday out of respect for President Coolidge's bereavement.

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, July 7.—The Democratic Convention agreed to release delegates from all pledges and instructions on voting, after which balloting proceeded on more independent lines. The 83rd ballot resulted as follows: McAdoo 413; Smith 368; Glass 76; Davis 72½.

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, July 7.—Brushing aside the proposals for the suspension of the rules and the release of delegates, the Democratic Convention today returned to the dreary business of balloting. The seventy-eighth ballot resulted in practically no change being recorded.

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, July 7.—A secret committee, appointed by the American Democratic Convention, has not succeeded in appointing an "outsider" as candidate for the Presidency.

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, July 7.—Mr. McAdoo received only 388 votes at the 84th ballot.

(Reuter's American Service)

Cleveland, July 7.—The Socialist Convention has endorsed the candidacy of Senator La Follette.

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, July 8.—Mr. McAdoo's slump was due to an allied drive against him, staged in accordance with the rules of modern warfare. Deprived of his veto power and deserted by Mississippi, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Oklahoma and Nevada, Mr. McAdoo, with his back against the wall, now only hopes that the deserters will return after their attempt to break the deadlock, but the other leaders and candidates are determined to keep Mr. McAdoo down, to show the futility of his candidacy and to open the way to a compromise candidate.

Advisory Board Will Investigate Vice In Colonies

London, July 7.—Replying to a question in the House of Commons today regarding maisons tolerees in Hongkong, Singapore and the Straits Settlement, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, announced that the constitution of a general advisory body to deal with social hygiene was shortly being established under the chairmanship of the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies; namely, two Members of the House, including Lady Astor; two representatives of the Council for Combating Venereal Disease, and representatives of the War Office, the Admiralty, the Ministry of Health and the Colonial Office.

Junk Guilds Terrorise Pilots, Wood Oil Cargoes Held Up At River Ports

(China Press Correspondence)

Wanhsien, Szechuen, June 25. —It is a week since Mr. E. C. Hawley, an American citizen, representing the British Firm of Arnhold Bros., was foully murdered by a mob of coolies, instigated by the Junk Guilds of Wanhsien and the Upper Yangtsze. It is also a week since the Commanding Generals of the Government troops in Wanhsien promised to see that the guilty persons were punished, and that adequate steps should be taken to protect foreign life and property hereafter. Although more of these promises have been fulfilled than the Chinese authorities ordinarily would expect to fulfill, there still remains much to be done before the steps taken to avenge Mr. Hawley's murder can be considered adequate to the gravity of the offense. In response to the insistent demands of the Commander of the British Gunboat in port, two men were executed on the day following Mr. Hawley's death. But these men were not those principally involved, the one being the aged father of an officer of the Junk Guild, and the other the "No. 6 man" of the Guild. The "No. 1 man" is still in the city, but the officials profess to know nothing about him or his connection with the affair and are apparently shielding him, perhaps because he formerly was connected with the military. One or two of the other men who are "wanted" are reported to have fled, and this report is no doubt correct. A reward is said to have been offered for their capture.

It would be hard to point to any attack on foreigners in China of a more sinister nature than this on Mr. Hawley. A mob is a mob the world over, and mobs will do reckless things at times. But one cannot but draw the conclusion that the Chinese in general have gotten over their fear of the foreign military forces, when they proceed to attack a foreigner with a foreign gunboat standing alongside, and a boatload of marines actually on the way to protect him. The attack was made so suddenly and the fatal end came so quickly, in less time than it takes to tell it,—that it seems it would have been impossible to prevent the crime under the circumstances. But the fact remains that the event makes one feel that there is no use in talking about foreign prestige any more; "there 'ain't no such animal'," at least in this part of China.

The American gunboat, Monocacy, arrived from Chungking last week, with the American Consul, Mr. C. J. Spiker, on board, and he has been working on the case since. The Admiral of the American Yangtsze Patrol is also due to arrive today.

A representative of Arnhold Bros. has arrived from Hankow to take charge of the work here. This would be the time for the foreign firms at Wanhsien to begin shipping wood-oil by foreign steamers, if they are ever to do so. The Junk Guilds have such a hold on the pilots of the foreign steamers, however, that it is doubtful whether any of them will risk taking any wood-oil on board, even if adequate protection is offered here at the time of loading. It is only two years ago that a pilot who had brought one of the French flag boats up river, after it had taken a cargo of goods down in spite of warnings issued by the Junk Guild, was stabbed to death and his heart cut out, in broad daylight, on one of the busy streets of Chungking. There seems to be no limit to the extent to which the Junk Guild is willing to go in order to maintain its control of the traffic on the Upper River. An opportunity is given the foreign interests to break the power of this monopoly now which it may not have again very soon. It remains to be seen what results can be obtained, and whether the people of this district will submit quietly to the transition from the old to the new order of things, or whether the change here too can come only after further bloodshed and violence, as has too often been the case in other countries.

BOWLER JAILED THREE MONTHS BY BRITISH COURT

Norman W. Bowler was sentenced to three months' imprisonment by Magistrate G. W. King of the British Police Court yesterday on six charges of securing goods by means of false pretenses, the charges—ranging from cigarette cases to motor cars—having been set forth previously.

Bowler, who has served a three months' sentence in Bilibid Prison, Manila on a similar charge, was told by the Magistrate yesterday that the worst aspect of his present case was that having obtained the property, he had pawned it. The previous case brought against him here, when he was discharged, should have been a warning that his extravagance should not be encouraged.

At the conclusion of the previous case, the Magistrate characterised the defendant as "an extravagant young ass."

company and an attorney appeared at the police station yesterday on behalf of the other employes in this firm.

The father, it was reiterated, is a respectable citizen. The accused has stated to the police that he found the revolver in Whangpoo Road several days ago. He blamed the movies, declaring that he got the idea from them and that, owing to financial difficulties, he came to the conclusion that the best method of obtaining sufficient funds to meet his obligations was to strike at a high target, such as his 20 years appraised on the Bund.

Toong will appear in the Mixed Court today.

Quits Opposition To Boxer Measure

(Reuter's Service)

London, July 8.—It is announced that, in view of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce's disapproval of the suggestion that the Boxer Indemnity Bill might provide a means of bargaining with China for a revision of the Trade Marks Law, Mr. A. M. Samuel, M. P. (Conservative), a member of the Executive Council of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, has withdrawn his opposition to the Bill.

The Manchester Guardian says that good hopes for the settlement of the trade marks dispute are entertained and that the dropping of the indemnity claim as far as the British Government is concerned will probably increase the grounds for these hopes.

purposes which required further explanation (Ministerial cheers). The whole affair was a mere storm in a teacup.

Both Mr. Asquith and Mr. Baldwin will demand publication of the text of the invitation in order to resume the debate on Mr. MacDonald's return to London on July 10.

(Reuter's Service)

London, July 8.—Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, prior to departing for Paris, said that his visit must be taken as an indication of his desire to see a settlement of the relations between Britain and France and to remove all misunderstanding. This was more particularly so in view of the fact that he was suffering from a severe attack of bronchitis. The duration of his visit would depend on circumstances, but he hoped to return by Thursday.

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, July 8.—The papers comment on Mr. MacDonald's visit in appreciative terms.

(Reuter's Service)

London, July 8.—There appears to be strong ground for hope that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's decision to go to Paris will clear up the misunderstanding between the French and British Governments and materially assist in averting the downfall of M. Herriot and, with it, indefinite postponement of the inter-Allied conference and a reparations settlement.

The decision immediately produced a change of tone in Paris, where it was received with the greatest satisfaction. A debate in the Senate, in which a big Opposition attack had been anticipated, was postponed till after the visit.

British Warship In San Francisco

(Reuter's American Service)

San Francisco, July 8.—The British Special Service Squadron arrived at San Francisco today, escorted by American war-craft. Admiral Sir Frederick Field has issued a message very heartily greeting the people of the United States.

Scouts Willing To Return To Duties

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Manila, July 8.—Officers at Fort McKinley spent the night examining individually the disaffected Scouts. They completed the examination of 100 of them, of whom all but six expressed willingness to return to duty. There still remain nearly 500, who are being examined today.

Similar investigations are being conducted at Corregidor and Camp Stotsenburg. No report has yet been received from these centres.

The tension is notably less this morning.

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Manila, July 8.—Some Filipino privates of the 12th Medical Regiment at Fort McKinley this morning refused to perform their duty, but later consented.

Ninety privates of the 57th Infantry refused to change their attitude, and will be dishonourably discharged immediately.

Camp Stotsenburg and Corregidor are reported quiet.

Hawaiian Village Life

BY PADRAIC COLUM

(In The Nation)

The island of Hawaii may be as big as the State of Connecticut. Its chief town is Hilo, where "the rain walks softly through the lehua trees." Hawaii has the active volcano Kilauea, the snow-topped mountains Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea; it has shining vistas of the Pacific, it has great lava-covered tracts that are terribly impressive, and it has deep gorges in which old-world Polynesia still lives on.

Very well do I remember a pastoral part of that island—a country of green slopes and rises that in the brilliant sunshine were greener than any green places I ever looked on. The place was dominated by Mauna Kea, a mountain that has snow on its top that is like frosting on a cake. The place had high geraniums and white lilies; its doves were cooing and its larks were singing and its calves were upon green hills. Men ride by on horses with wreaths of flowers on their hats; the roads are a tangle of blue and purple morning-glory.

Further down the blue ocean makes a great frill of lace on the black-lava shingle; opening to the ocean is one of Waipolo's thirteen valleys. The hills bear down in gulches that are furrowed by narrow white streams, below there is a flat that is marked into different squares by rice patches and taro patches. Down into the valley and up out of it come men on horseback leading horses that carry high packs. So they go into and out of the valley, bringing down stores or bringing up produce.

A man is on the road that will bring him by winding and zigzag ways down into the valley. He wears a yellow oilskin, and the foot that protrudes out of his wooden stirrup is bare. It rains; he has on a hat of lau-hala fiber.

What mixture has his Hawaiian blood? I ask myself as he stops and speaks to us in Hawaiian and English. A pure Hawaiian would be genial if he spoke to us in this off-hand way; he would laugh with us. But this man smiles only, and as he smiles he looks into our faces in a childlike and pathetic way. He talks lengthily, holding his roan horse. Hawaiians are dramatic, but they are never actors; this man sees himself and he is acting a part—he is a play-boy.

There is pathos in his eyes, there is a sense of loneliness about the man. Hawaiians have distinction, but it is race distinction, not personal distinction. And this man, for all his Hawaiian speech, has a personal distinction. He was Kanaka pure, he told us; father Kanaka, mother Kanaka—a Kanaka of the valleys he was.

"What do they live on in the valley?" I asked. On what they grew—taro, sweet potatoes, rice. They had fish, too, he said, and then he spoke of that splendid Hawaiian fish, the mullet. They had poi and fish—nothing else; no tea, no coffee, no pig now.

He apologized for his inexpressiveness in English. He was three months at school, and then—pau—no more. He tapped his head—not good. On account of his poor brain, he suggested, he had remained poor. "Man no shoes, horse no shoe," said he. Sure enough his horse was unshod. He protruded his bare foot and gazed at it pathetically. "Man bare, horse bare," said he.

Then he brightened up. "If you fellow," said he, "come down we give you poi, potatoes, fish." As a further inducement he added oklehou. Oklehou is the native alcohol. He added something more. "If you fellow come down wahine hula." His wife would dance for me.

I thought of a middleaged Hawaiian woman dancing and I was not fired at the thought. Then I asked him how long he had been married.

"Three months, two days," he told me.

"What age are you?" I asked.

"Forty-three," he said.

"Not married before?" I asked.

"Three wahine before—four wahine altogether."

Four wives! I expressed astonishment. I thought that perhaps he was dignifying mere casual connections. But he held up his hand solemnly. "I promise. I Christian."

"Which kind of Christian?"

"Christian, Hawaiian style," he said.

Could he mean Mormon? I wondered. The Mormons are creating something like a national church for the Polynesians. But the Morman missionaries whom I knew gave a very strict discipline to their converts; in the houses into which we went with them there was no oklehou—no talk of a hula either.

"Mormon," he said.

"Then how does it come," I asked, "that you made promises to four wahine?"

"One was living in the valley now. One dead. One in Hilo. One in Molokai!"

Molokai sounded ominous. Was the wahine sick? I asked.

"Sick, yes. Pake-sickness."

Pake-sickness—Chinese sickness. That meant leprosy! I looked at the man; he sat on his horse in the rain, a child-like and pathetic smile on his face. But he brightened again. The wahine that lived with him now would do a hula for me if I came down with him into the valley.

"How many men and women were below?"

"Thirty wahine, thirty. . . ."

"Kanaka," I suggested.

He paused, not accepting the word. "Thirty kane," he said. Kanaka means men; kane means husbands or heads of families.

"Thirty kane, thirty wahine," I said. "Keiki (children) too?"

"Plenty keiki," he assented.

"And the Pake—had they children too?"

"Pake grow rice, not grow mans," he said.

Suddenly he started off and went down zigzag in the rain. He waved his hand as he went. For all that he claimed to be straight Polynesian, there was something about the man that reminded me of Connacht or Castile. He was a play-boy because of some dash of Iberian blood.

The heavy surge of the ocean is pounding on the shore. The sky above is all covered with shroudlike clouds. The little fields are green, and they are marked off from each other by walls of loose stone. If, before my faculties were awake I stood outside this dwelling, I might fancy myself in the west of Ireland.

But the unfamiliarities of the landscape would soon break in. The walls that mark off the fields seem to be made of black coals—they are of lumps of lava. Then there are the stringy trees—a long piece of string with a knot on its top, kept upright and swaying—these are the Pacific trees the cocoanut palms, and they are everywhere around. Then there are other trees that are still more extraordinary. I look with amazement upon a grove of them—the hala trees. Their trunks and their branches grow bare. Then at the end of the branch there is a sheaf of green streamers like reeds. And each sheaf has in it a big, cone shaped fruit that is serrated like a pine-apple. The branches grow out and then twist back and twist back again—as if some-one had twisted the back of his hand toward us and then twisted the fingers of the hand he had twisted. These trees grow out of the blackness of lava soil and lava blocks. This particular grove is filled with the roar of the ocean, and I think that if there was ever a place where I might see the

Comparison

It is obvious that where claims are made, comparison is inevitable. Comparison of the NEW Columbia Grafonola with ordinary gramophones has given it a place in music that no other gramophone has attained in so short a space of time. Comparison of the "NEW PROCESS" Records (without Scratch) with ordinary records reveals all the deficiencies of the latter.

To hear either one is to enjoy but one-half of a great achievement. To hear them in combination is to experience the sensation of a new experience. But to hear them in comparison with ordinary gramophones is to understand the enthusiasm of master musicians and music-lovers alike.

The Peking police authorities are apparently in earnest with regard to the levying of the new house tax. We have already heard from one foreigner living in the East City near the Hatamen (says the North China Standard, that he has received a communication asking for the payment of the tax amounting to $20 a month. As he pays only $100 rent per month, the assessment of 20 per cent seems most exorbitant. The victim of this high-handed action, who does not enjoy extraterritorial right, declares that he is not going to submit tamely to this arbitrary method of extortion. It will be interesting to watch further developments in the matter.

Kumagae, Japanese To Be Seen In Tennis Exhibition At Majestic Hotel Today

Davis Cup Player, With Fellow Countryman, To Meet Local Pair, Of Whom John Wade Will Be One; Student And School Boy Competitions

Weather permitting, the long awaited tennis exhibition in which M. Kumagae, the Japanese Internationalist and Davis Cup player will be seen, will take place at the courts of the Majestic Hotel on Bubbling Well Road this afternoon, starting about four o'clock.

Shanghai Tennis fans have been agog ever since it was first announced that Mr. Kumagae would come to this city as a permanent resident, and now that opportunity is here to see him in action it is anticipated that the Majestic courts will be crowded for the matches this afternoon. The Japanese star will appear in a doubles match with a fellow Japanese player, and opposing them will be a team of well known Shanghai stars, probably Mr. Wade and Mr. Canavarro or Mr. Toussant.

The Majestic courts are in prime condition for today's matches, the recent dry weather having made the turf firm and fast.

Elcano Defeats Asheville, 16-6

With the exception of the first inning, when the Elcano was trying out Big Boy Stazinski in the box, the Asheville boys were unable to do any damage. In the first inning the Asheville scored four runs, through bunched hits and error on the part of Lisk, who played at short.

The second inning, however, saw Griffith the old reliable pitcher of the Elcanos back in the box, and he held the opposing team at his mercy with his outdrops and mile a minute shoots.

The game was scheduled to go nine innings, but it seemed that the Asheville aggregation had enough and so the game was called after seven innings. The Elcano nine was in fine stride, hitting the pill all over the lot, Mullaney contributing a homer. Errors were made by both nines, on which a few runs were tallied.

Elcano will play it's next game Sunday with Shanghai. Sometime ago Shanghai scored a 2 to 1 victory over the Elcano, but Sunday may be another story. Score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	R	H	E
Asheville	4	1	0	0	1	0	0	6	4	7
Elcano	2	5	0	0	5	4	0	16	13	4

America In Polynesia

Menehune, the goblin fairies of Hawaii, this is the place.

This district, cut off from the habitation area by great tracts of lava-covered ground, has no Japanese, Portuguese, or Filipinos resident; there are two Chinese families here, but they have Hawaiian speech. It is one of the few places on the large islands that the Polynesian Hawaiians have reserved for themselves. English is the language of instruction in the schools, but the children learn Hawaiian songs and Hawaiian is the language one hears them use in their play. The Hawaiian language and the Hawaiian way of living may hold their own here for at least another generation.

Near by is a heiau—a pagan temple, or rather a precinct for pagan sacrifices. It is an oblong mound of black stones, with holes where the idols stood, and with an inclosure where human beings were sacrificed. The cocoanut palms near it may be the trees that Captain Cook's sailors looked upon. On the beach are the canoes with their outriggers. In a garden that I pass a man is working with a primitive digging tool, the wooden spade that was used when iron was a precious metal in the islands. In a shelter near by a blear-eyed woman, who looks a hundred years of age at least, is plaiting the lau-hala fiber into a mat such as the first white visitors to the islands slept on. A boy with a stone pestle in his hands is pounding the taro into poi.

I could easily imagine myself a first comer to this place. But at night, in the house, we are very up-to-date. We sit around a kerosene lamp. The Hawaiians are not quite used to tables and chairs; the lamp is left on the floor; we sit on the mats and read the weekly journals, the Hoku o Hawaii (the Star of Hawaii) and the Nupepa Kuokoa (the Independent Newspaper).

The life on this farm by the sea is leisurely, and by leisurely I do not mean lazy. They are a fine people, the folk in whose house I am living, with active bodies. Like most Hawaiians they have ability in handicraft and decoration: all day the taciturn grandmother, seated on the floor, plaits a mat of the streams of the hala tree—long, reed-like fibers softened in water, split, and then plaited as a child at home would plait a little mat of rushes. Beautifully clean mats of the kind she is making cover the floors of the different rooms. The bedspread in the room I sleep in, with its bold branching design of bread-fruit, has been made in the house. This bread-fruit design was given to the Hawaiians by the missionaries.

And all day the little girl—I must write her name carefully—Ka-puna-puke-lani, "The Well at the Heavenly Gate," works with her needle. What charming interiors they might have, I think, if they would give their decorative impulses free play! The different lei of lima-blossoms that hang on the walls make a real decoration. They have no pictures, but they have what every Hawaiian house has, a row of photographs enlarged: the mild men and women who are their subjects look fearfully grim. I have come to think that the Hawaiians do not look on photographs as we look on them, as pictured mementos of friends and admired people: to the Hawaiians, I believe, a collection of photographs means a real society. Every Hawaiian has, or used to have, a mele inoa, a name-song that was known to their friends. I have a notion that the Hawaiians in whose houses I have been often chant a brother's or a sister's or a son's or a daughter's name-song under one of these photographs; they can, I believe, bring up a presence in a way that we could not bring up the presence of any of our friends.

The women of this house have not to make ready food for pigs or cattle. There are pigs here in plenty, but they are turned into the guava-fields, and there, with their litters around them, they stay, knocking the wild guava fruit off the bushes or eating it where it lies on the ground—the guava that we know only when it comes to us as delicious jelly. The guava was introduced into the islands, and, like many other plants brought into it, has became a pest. The pigs have it all. And the women do not have to go to milk in the mornings and evenings; we do without milk and butter here, although there is plenty of pasture for cattle. The Hawaiians, in spite of the fact that they have had cattle since Vancouver's day, are not a milk or a butter using people.

As in the old days, they live near the beach. They have always been a beach-dwelling people, and I note that the Rev. Mr. Ellis, who was here a hundred years ago, says that the interior of the island of Hawaii was an unexplored wilderness. And, as in the old days the people are partly fishermen, partly farmers. I go with one of the boys of the house to a cultivated field. Instead of ridges there are little mounds in the field—mounds of black earth. In these mounds the sweet potatoes grow. We grub them up and take home a bagful for supper. There is another vegetable There is another vegetable in the field—the small-leaved Chinese cabbage; these, too, we pull up, and we cut down some branches of bananas. Then we make our way back through the guava bushes and across the walls of lava-stone.

In the evening, after supper, we sit for a while on the veranda. Relations of the family come from the houses near by and talk an Hawaiian that is full of barks and grunts. The boys and girls of the house take out their ukuleles or their steel guitars and play and sing Hawaiian melodies. They love music and song; like all their countryfolk, they sing without apology or self-consciousness. I ask the little boy who has been playing the ukulele to tell me what the song is about that has just been sung. "It is about a girl who runs away from her step-mother; she makes the girl work too hard and she gives her nothing to eat. The girl goes into the forest and she lives on guavas and shrimps out of the stream. There is an owl that helps her—I guess the owl is the ghost of her grandmother. One day the cowboys see her. They lasso her when she is in the stream." "Do they bring her back to her step-mother?" I ask. "No. They take her to their camp. I guess she stays with the boys." His mother has a different ending for the story. The boys take her to a show-place and show her off as a wild girl. The song is called "The Mountain Girl."

It is not easy to know who who in a Polynesian family. There are uncles and aunts in the house, and they seem to have as much authority as father or mother. Children come and stay: there is no way for an outsider to know whether they have been adopted into the family or not. Officially the family I am with is quite a large one; the mother tells me she has given birth to twelve children. There are plenty of children in the Hawaiian family, but the infant mortality is very high—higher among them than it is among any of the other races on the islands. I have a notion that if the Hawaiian made friends with the cow their infant mortality would be lessened, and the race would have a better chance—and I believe it has quite a good chance—of coming back to a place in the world.

Marriage as we understand it—the family as we understand it—is only beginning to emerge among the Polynesian people. The word for "marriage" that one sees over announcements in the Hawaiian papers has been borrowed from the English. There is no clear-cut word for "mother" or "father" in Hawaiian. "Makua" means something like "relation," one adds "wahine" to it, meaning "woman," or "kane," meaning "male," and one gets the terms for "mother" and "father." The grandfather was as close to the child as the father, the grandmother as the mother, and aunts and uncles were "makua" too. If children were scolded in their parents' house they went to their uncle's or their aunt's and stayed there; they had the right to dip in the poi bowl. Children were always being adopted or given away—the custom still flourishes—and all this went toward making the family life indistinct.

And what of the Hawaiian girls? When they are beautiful it is the beauty of abundance—the swelling bosom, the lustrous hair, the eyes large and dark. And their charm is the charm of softness—softness of curve, of smile, of speech. But there is something stolid about them, and when one sees them in the country places, with their dark faces under the high-crowned, broad-brimmed hat of lauhala one knows that in Polynesia love could never have been the gay science. Their eyes have their psychic history—yes large and dark, but unluminous. They are girls who have summer, but no spring.

They are not keen on marrying men of their own race; they marry Chinese, Japanese, Filipinos, Porto Ricans, and, of course, haoles, the men of European stock. If the Hawaiians cease to exist as a distinct race in the near future it will be mainly because their women prefer to marry men of other races than their own. They say that the Hawaiians are not good providers, but that may be only a rationalisation of some biological urge—the race has been isolated for thousands of years, and it may be that there is a necessity for them to mingle with other peoples.

Mirage Pictures In Air New Danger To Aviators

Major Martin's Crash In Alaska May Have Been Due To An Optical Illusion In Which Reality Was Distorted By Atmospheric Refraction

Major Martin, the army flier, who fell in the Aleutian Islands, ascribes his mishap to a cause that has thus far not figured much among the perils of air travel. He says that he was led out of his route by a deceptive mirage which changed the apparent face of his surroundings.

His experience is not at all unlikely to be that of many another air pilot. The danger of aerial distortion is of such a character that it is bound to trouble the aviator far more seriously than it can trouble those who travel the the surface of the earth.

Hitherto the mirage has done little mischief except to delude desert travelers with visions of springs and palmy oases that are not where they seem to be. It is such a far cry from camels and roasting sands to airplanes speeding over northern seas that the mirage risk in flying would not readily suggest itself. But it is there, none the less. The laws of physics call for the creation of a mirage under many conditions that may surround the aviator in flight.

What happens to the light rays transmitting the image that forms the mirage some what resembles what happens to a baseball twirled by the pitcher so as to perform a drop curve or an upshoot. Both ball and image are forced into a curved course by their encountering air of different densities at their upper and lower edges. In one respect, however, the curved ball and the light wave act in exactly opposite manners.

The ball is constantly sheering away from the denser mass of air that the forward-moving half of its surface throws forward. The light wave, on the contrary, curves continually further into the denser air. Like a pair of wheels on an axle, it turns to the side that is retarded. That side is the one where the air is denser, for light is slowed down by the air's density.

The effects on the view of the flier are serious only under the exceptional conditions where the atmosphere, warmed by water or by sunlit desert sands on a still day, forms a lighter layer beneath him, next to the surface. Above that light layer the air, dense at first again grows lighter as the height increases. The aviator flying somewhat above the densest level then looks off, as he supposes, in the direction of the earth's horizon.

The light rays that come to him from that direction arrive from a much lower level than would appear. Starting level with the earth or the sea, they have bent up into the denser air, passed through the plane of greatest density, and tended to flatten out again toward horizontal, as they met the thinner air above. The distortion, which may easily amount to half a degree of direction, will in that case cause the surface of land or sea to appear 500 feet or ro higher, at ten miles' distance. If the aviator knows his altitude, he will suppose that a landmark seen on the surface is perhaps twenty miles away, instead of ten.

To make the matter worse, two images of the same rock or island may reach his eye by separate routes, one having traveled mainly underneath the plane of densest air and the other having taken its course mainly in the upper air layer. He then sees the landmark in two apparent places at once, and finds himself in a dilemma that might puzzle Einstein. He is apt to conclude that he is off his course, and that he really sees two rocks or islands, one many miles, perhaps, beyond the other.

Beneath the path taken by the lower image there lies a great blind area. He cannot see any rock, ship, signal or companion airplane in this blind area. The light waves that would bear him the image of any such object are all deflected out of range of his place of what is really there. In this way he may lose his companions without really having become far separated from them.

MIRAGE OR MIST

The fact that members of the world flight squadron repeatedly lost sight of one another while over Alaskan waters was attributed at the time to fog, but it was quite possibly due to mirage action. A mirage of the sky, appearing where the sea should be, as it does in certain phases of the distortion, is readily taken for a bank of mist.

It may be asked why the sailor does not have the same experiences with the deceptive mirages that are likely to trouble the aviator. The answer is that to some extent he does. The calm, clear morning at sea when one cannot behold the horizon is not uncommon. The upper works of a vessel miles away may appear with startling distinctness, with nothing underneath them, much like the grin, as a bookish sailor once observed, of the Cheshire Cat. The inverted lower mirage likewise may be seen off sandy coasts, where the heating of the air over the sand creates the needful lower layer of rarified air.

But sailors pay little attention to the mirage, comparatively speaking, because on its part, it does not interfere seriously with them. Their eyes, except when "taking" the sun, or studying the weather, do most of their work on the horizontal plane, and they do their work at a moderate distance above the sea surface. They are thus situated so that the mirage can cause relatively little bother.

This is said in full consciousness of the risk of making sweeping assertions on nautical matters, and of the probability that seasoned skippers may cite exceptional cases to the contrary of the assertion. The point to be noted is that compared to the sailor, the aviator has much more compelling reasons to dread the mirage and to take heed of it.

HEIGHT DISTORTED

The reason of this is that the aviator has constantly to reckon with objects on another level than his own. It is precisely in the dimension of height that the mirage performs its tricks. It is said to be possible to observe certain mirage effects on a small scale by sighting the eye close to the end of a board fence warmed by the sun in hot, still weather.

The great plane surfaces of the world however, are all flat. Air layers of different density, moreover, are bound to lie one on top of another. This limits their magic to distorting the single dimension of height, the dimenson that is peculiarly the province of the airman.

Until the subject of the mirage as an obstacle to air navigation shall have had fuller scientific study, one cannot say how much of a hindrance it is likely to offer. Its prevalence in certain regions and its rarity in others, its occurrence at certain seasons and under peculiar conditions of weather and temperature call for wide study in advance of any useful conclusions.

The possibility exists, at least, that some of the cases of long-distance fliers going astray may have had their reason in visual distortions of the atmosphere not fully reckoned on at the time.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

New York, June 2.—Massachusetts, the United States and humanity, sustained a loss when the late Samuel W. McCall passed into the great beyond. He had been a member of Congress and an author of no mean distinction. The recently published work of McCall on the Patriotism Of The American Jew would seem to merit more than passing consideration at the hands of those interested in a study of racial antipathies and characteristics. This book has been published since the death of its author together with an introduction written by President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard College. Much data and material is set forth in an interesting way. The opinions and impressions are those of two eminent men who have treated a subject of wide importance in a manner that should prove of value to all Americans irrespective of creed or nationality.

The point is made that in the various wars in which the United States has been a party, the Jews have rendered conspicuous service upon the firing lines and by subscriptions to loans to the government. Such services have been given during the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican, Spanish and late World War. The record of the part played is replete with interest and, since it has assembled so much information, should prove instructive as well to most readers.

Since the coinage of the phrase "melting pot" many views have been held as to just what the term means when applied to conditions in America. But from the book in question by McCall and its introduction by President Eliot, the thought is gathered that the melting-pot theory does not include, necessarily, the intermarriage of races so as to produce a standardised American citizen, not a fusion of blood but a blending of the best work, culture and traditions of the various races.

CHILDREN'S THEATERS

King Solomon said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," or words to that effect. But the perplexing question is concerning "the way in which he should go." Pedagogues have differed throughout history as to the best means of training the child's mind. Teaching by objects, by doing the thing and by combining something of interest or amusement along with the lesson have all been advocated and, no doubt, followed with varying degrees of success. In America the public school system has been an institution from the earliest days of the country's life. Its value as an aid to democracy and the prevention of casts has been recognised. There has been growing a sentiment in favor of higher salaries for teachers upon the theory that the children deserve the best talent and instruction that can be procured. Of course, the laborer is worthy of his hire and underpaid instructors have sought out other professions where compensation is greater, a tendency very much to the detriment of the schools.

Just now Dr. W. Boritch's idea of a theater for children, which was carried out in Berlin, is receiving discussion in America. He ponts out that children require theatrical productions that have been perfected with even more care than adults; that grown-ups dream in sleep while children have their day dreams, seeing wonder and enchantment in ordinary things, just as poets and artists do. The theory is advanced that children are robbed of much by present conditions in cities where everything is made for the instruction and amusement of the adults. Pantomimic action and fairy stories appeal to the child. Moving pictures as at present shown tend to ripen the child's conceptions of the cruelties and sufferings of an adult world all too soon. Children's theaters have been established in Petrograd, Warsaw and Berlin, and are urged as a much needed auxiliary to America's educational system.

MONROE'S HOME

On the northwest corner of Lafayette and Prince Streets, in the City of New York, stands the house where James Monroe, fifth President of the United States of America, lived and died. The building, a two story brown, brick edifice, has fallen into sad disrepair and is being used by rag-pickers in carrying on that business. A bronze tablet upon the side of the structure announces to the interested persons the fact that Mr. Monroe died there July 4; 1831. But the present evidences of barter and trade, the rush and roar of traffic together with the appearances and speech of the inhabitants of that section, make it difficult to realise that an ex-president of the country once resided there.

Just now a campaign is under way to purchase the old house and restore it as a patriotic shrine for Americans who know something of the unusual history of Monroe. It probably would also serve to suggest to many thousands of foreign born, who reside in that vicinity, something of the life of that eminent statesman and of the reverence in which he is held. The close proximity of the lower "East Side" with its babel of tongues would seem to constitute an additional reason, therefore, for dedicating the house to the memory of such a distinguished servant of the nation while it was still very young.

Latin Americans, it is believed, will likewise manifest an interest in the project as a sort of Pan-American shrine, for it was Monroe who announced the policy that the United States would not permit the nations of Europe to get too much influence in this hemisphere. This famous policy has become known to every school boy as the "Monroe Doctrine." Spain was carrying on war against some of her rebellious colonies and President Monroe declared that the United States would neither interfere in European wars nor look with indifference upon Europe's interference in affairs in North and South America. That doctrine has stood for one hundred years as a sort of expression in behalf of Latin American nations and a guarantee of freedom to them in their efforts to achieve independence free from all foreign interference. President McKinley, almost three-quarters of a century later, indicated that the United States considered the Monroe Doctrine to be still in effect, when he took his stand in connection with the Venezelian incident.

It is also planned to make an effort to interest leaders in the Democratic Party in behalf of the plans being made to restore President Monroe's home. The point is made that Monroe, like Jefferson, was one of the earliest Democrats to serve his party and country with such marked distinction; and that his work, character and life should be brought anew to the attention of the country. He held many honorable public offices and the period while he was president was known as the "Era of good feeling."

After President Monroe's death in the Prince Street house at the age of seventy-three his remains rested in New York City for a number of years when a revival of patriotism resulted in their removal to Richmond, Virginia where two other presidents of the nation, William Henry Harrison and John Tyler, were also buried.

WIVES OF ALIENS

The Supreme Court in Washington rendered a decision during the week which has alarmed thousands of foreign citizens residing in America. The case of Cittel and Israel Gottlieb, who are wife and son of Solomon Gottlieb, from Palestine, was decided by the highest court which held that the wife and son were not entitled to land at the time they arrived due to the fact that the quota had been filled. The father, a Jewish rabbi, had preceded his wife and son by several months, when the quota had not been exhausted and has gone so far as to take out his papers declaring his intention to become an American Citizen before the arrival of his wife and son.

The Supreme Court ruled that the quota law of 1921 applied to the mother and son although the father had been admitted legally. This decision over-ruled the Federal District and Circuit Court of Appeals decisions in the same case in New York State. These two lower courts had held in effect that aliens had aright to remain on the theory that the quota law of 1921 did not apply to the wife and dependent children of an immigrant who had previously been legally admitted to the country. The Supreme Court's holding makes no distinction in favor of dependents of the husband and lays down the rule that a wife and child may not land even though the head of the family may have been admitted before the quota was exhausted. The test seems to be whether the quota has been filled at the time any alien seeks to land; if so, the alien is ipso facto denied admission.

Thousands have been admitted to the United States under similar conditions to those in the Gottlieb case. It now becomes necessary, according to best opinions, to take steps to depart those who were admitted as dependents after the quotas were filled. Unless new legislation is enacted by the present Congress, deportation proceedings will probably result under the law governing the numerous cases of that kind.

TRADE WITH GREECE

According to views of the Greek Minister, M. Tsamados, there has been going on a rapid growth of trade between the United States and Greece since the world war. Many citizens of Greece residing in the United States at the time of the war, hastened back to fight for their country. They carried tastes, ideas and desires from America to their native land thus starting a demand for products that has steadily increased, especially in the line of manufactured goods. Greece controls the worlds supply of emery and sells to America raisins, wool, and olive oil. The next ten years will witness a great development of agriculture and Greece will require farming implements and other things produced in America.

$70,000,000 FOR COLLEGES

An estimate was made by Pres. Campbell of Oregon University that the State universities of the United States have been the recipients of some $70,000,000 as gifts from the public and public-spirited men who desire to do something in a substantial way for the cause of universal training. He cited as instances where universities have been greatly benefitted by such gifts, the University of Michigan and the University of California. This is a comparatively new field for philanthropy and one that ought to receive liberal consideration from those who seek opportunities to do good with surplus funds.

BAND CONCERTS

The Goldman Band concerts in the Mall of Central Park have opened again and will run for twelve weeks during the summer season, ending August 24. These concerts during the past season were given to audiences ranging from 10,000 to probably 25,000 persons. The accommodations in the way of seats have been expanded and the band composed of sixty musicians will give sixty concerts during the summer. These are free to the public. For several years they were supported by private and voluntary subscriptions and the work of raising funds became so great that the Guggenheim family decided to underwrite the entire series of sixty concerts for this year.

FORMAMINT

THE GERM KILLING THROAT TABLET

If you Suffer from "Smoker's Throat"

—or other painful irritations of the or[illegible]vity you should at once use FORMAMINT.

"In both acute and chronic pharyngitis, induced by abuse of tobacco, Formamint Tablets have proved particularly efficacious in the hands of the medical profession," writes the Medical Press.

Sucking these palatable, harmless tablets promotes an abundant flow of saliva, which itself is rendered germicidal. Thus the whole mouth and throat are slowly saturated with a soothing, healing antiseptic fluid, which penetrates everywhere.

With the destruction of the causative bacteria, swelling and inflammation subside, and Nature does the rest—without the fuss and trouble of old-fashioned methods like gargling or painting the throat with caustic and nauseating chemicals.

AMERICAN COLONY AT TAIANFU HAS FOURTH PROGRAM

Enjoyable Celebration Held On The Side Of Sacred Taishan

(China Press Correspondence)

Taianfu, Shantung, July 4.—The patriotic Americans of this community assembled at the summer residences on this Taishan mountain side today for the usual celebration. There were fireworks both literal and figurative. Though no formal address was given there was a roll call by states when individuals responded briefly from eighteen states of the union, two provinces of Canada and from England. Each cottage prepared a "stunt" which was greatly enjoyed. A great picnic dinner with all the proper fixings was one of the events to deserve mention.

These small group celebratiops by Americans far from home are often marked, as was this one, by evidence of real and sincere patriotism not always displayed in the larger communities in the Homeland. Regular celebrations have been held each year in this city since 1903 and the Chinese are well aware that the Fourth of July is a big day for their American neighbors.

Our sacred mountain Taishan is as usual attracting many groups of people to its summit during the Summer vacation days. The Railway hotel gets most of the guests though many come to the Methodist Mission compound because a certain guide book tells the traveler that there is no hotel here and the only hope of entertainment is at the Methodist Mission. As a matter of fact the Railway Hotel is a very attractive place and is equipped to take the best of care of guests.

CONFERENCE CLOSES

The Shantung Student Summer Conference of the Y.M.C.A. closed here yesterday. There has been an attendance of 130 students and leaders and the week has been spent in profitable meetings. The buildings and campus of the Methodist Middle School were used for the conference and a combination of efficient work by the executive secretary Mr. Rupert H. Stanley of Tsinanfu with careful local arrangements resulted in a very satisfactory conference. Among the leaders may be mentioned Bishop Scott, of the Anglican Church; Dr. T. L. Lee, Dean of the School of Arts of the Shantung Christian University; the Reverend Dr. Cady, Dean of the Theological School of the Shantung Christian University; Reverend Messrs. Abernethy, Hibbard and Hanson, of the Taianfu Missions, and a number of the Chinese and American secretaries of the Y.M.C.A.

The Annual Summer Conference of the Young Women's Christian Association of Shantung has also been in session here in the buildings of the Methodist Girls School. There have been about forty students and leaders in attendance at this conference and reports indicate a fine interest and a profitable week of meetings.

This is a popular place for these conferences as this city is at the foot of great Taishan, the oldest sacred mountain in the world, and the delegates are always interested in these places of historic interest so that these conferences meet here often.

contest for the men. Some American sailors were present.

Tennis is the main sport here but swimming at the splendid pool in Russian Valley is a close second. So far this season it has been cool and rainy that swimming has not been very attractive.

Beginning the middle of July there will be a two-week School of Religious Education and the last week of July comes the annual Kuling Conference with a speaker from abroad.

Hupeh Tuchun Asks For Lion's Share Of Bond Proceeds

(Dah Tong News Bureau)

Peking, July 8.—Tuchun Hsiao Yao-nan has asked for a portion of the proceeds of the German Drawn Bonds for the following items of expenditure:

1.—Advances made for the ammunition supplied to Lu Yung-ting and Ma Chi.

2.—Advances made for the ammunition supplied to Sun Chuan-fang and Chow Yin-jen.

3.—Advances made for the ammunition supplied to Fan Peng-jen.

4.—Three advances made for the Szechuen Expedition.

5.—Payment of specie for the military notes issued by Wu Pei-fu.

6.—Advances made for ammunition used by the Kweichow Expedition.

These total over $3,000,000. The Ministry of Finance has wired to Wu Pei-fu to ask Hsiao to reduce his claim.

Shen Hung-yin, in a telegram to Governor Chao Heng-ti of Hunan, asserts that he has declared an armistice with Lu Yung-ting, but a Hunan brigade is now assisting Ma Chi in assaulting Chuanchow. Chao has wired to Peking and Loyang to urge Ma to refrain from attacking.

Yang Sen, in a code message to Peking and Loyang, complains of the attempt of Yuan Tsu-ming in alienating the loyalty of Ho Kwan-li, his division commander. Wu Pei-fu has instructed to march the Kweichow forces under Wang Tien-pei and the Shensi forces under Chang Fang-mou to Kweichow and to abolish his headquarters at Chungking.

The Presidential Office favors the appointment of Wang Wei-cheng as commander of the ninth division, but Wu Pei-fu recommends Tung Tseng-kuo. If the latter course is taken, Wang Cheng-ping, threatens to resign.

Commemorative Bulletin Issued By Ching Chong

The 1924 Commemorative Bulletin of the Commercial Department of Ching Chong High School has just made its appearance and a copy has been received by the China Press. It is an ambitious undertaking, consisting of a preface by K. T. Chu, editor, greetings from F. Zia, teacher of English, Pu S. Fung, Yoliang Chang, a historial sketch of the institution, who's who of the class and interesting articles offered by the class for their literary work.

The book, artistically bound, is profused illustrated with the view of the school and pictures of athletic and academic activities, which make the undertaking compare favorably with the year book of any high school in the United States.

Kuling Motor Road Is To Be Extended

(China Press Correspondence)

Kuling, July 5.—Kuling, generally conceded to be the most pleasant and popular summer resort in China, is to add another notable improvement in the near future. The auto road is to be extended to the top of the mountain at an early date. The road has for years been a paying proposition from Kiukiang to Lien Hwa Tung and now, after years of hesitation and hitches resulting from demands for squeeze, it is promised that a private Chinese company will build the road.

The American residents kept the Glorious Fourth in a typical way. There were games for the young and a spirited baseball

JAPAN FACES VERY SERIOUS PROBLEMS IN TRADE FIELD

Financial And Industrial Issues Need Expert Handling

FORCES AT WORK

Importing Business Has Been Overdone, Says Journal

Japan is facing serious trade problems at the moment, and, according to Mr. F. C. Chappel and other American trade experts, the financial and industrial matters of the country will require very careful handling during the coming years. It is pointed out that forces are at work which must be met with wise statesmanship and business capacity.

It is pointed out by "The Annalist" of New York that the importing trade in Japan has been overdone for the present and that some time will be required to make the necessary readjustments. It appears that some importers, pressed for capital, now are re-exporting at a loss goods which are, or will be, really needed later on, but which cannot be held for lack of credit.

The success of the loans recently floated by the Japanese Government in New York and London, on excellent terms to the investor, gave an additional impetus to the orgy of importing. Now the reaction has come.

IMPORTING OVERDONE

Soon after the nation began to recover from the first blow of the earthquake, and its terrible devastating effects, the importers there, seeing an excellent opportunity for making money, started importing from foreign markets the goods most likely to be required in the work of reconstruction.

All this was right if done within reason, but it was overdone, and now the principal ports are choked with all descriptions of foreign products, so much so that some of the shipping companies have threatened to dump cargoes out in the open. Warehouse accommodation at the ports is very scarce and extremely dear. So, many importers have found it cheaper to leave their goods in customs sheds and pay the cost of doing so.

In such circumstances, it was not surprising that the value of the yen abroad should have fallen. It should have had the effect of stimulating Japan's export trade, but there are influences at work, apart from currency fluctuations, which tend to restrict the country's resumption of foreign trade on anything like the level of former years.

The weakness of Japan's foreign trade is that it is largely based on the export of one commodity, silk, to the American market, and this makes it very sensitive to economic changes either at home or in the United States. Consequently, it was inevitable that it should suffer from such an upheaval as the earthquake.

Even before the earthquake, Japan had been importing heavily in excess of her exports, so that when the exports almost ceased after the disaster, and were not resumed for some time, the financial resources and credit of the country were put to a very severe test, especially when huge quantities of foreign goods had to be purchased for reconstruction.

CHEAP LABOR GONE

One of the conditions which has been holding back readjustment is the increased cost of labor. Japan has lost one of her biggest advantages as an exporting nation; she has lost her cheap labor. One of the most important changes that occurred in Japan as a result of the world war was in the status of labor.

Early in the world war, Japanese laborers awoke to the fact that they could obtain an increased share of the profits arising out of their work. Wages and the cost of living then began to rise simultaneously, and 1919 the former were double those of the pre-war level. It was not only cheap production that enabled Japan to sell her goods abroad during that period, but the preoccupation of the European producers.

Today there is little truth in the familiar picture of the Japanese worker living on a few spoonfuls of rice a day and producing silks and cottons, paper goods and glassware at a cost which enabled the exporter to defy all competition. All these things are changed, and the Japanese manufacturer has to face an entirely new set of conditions.

H. C. MARSHALL,

Good Weather Improves Cotton Prospects In U. S.

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, June 13.—Undoubtedly the weather throughout the South has shown improvement during the week under review, and many believe that, if present conditions continue for the next two weeks, end-June reports will show the average improvement for the month. It is the general impression among cotton men that an early start for the crop and rapid development was essential to escape the worst ravages of the boll weevil, and while progress has been slower than normal thus far, it is hoped that a good spell of weather will restore much of the plant's backwardness. South Georgia, in particular, is contemplating a strong fight against the weevils this year, and some contend that, so far as the weevil is concerned, the fact that the crop is slow this season, may prove a blessing on the ground that weevils which appeared at the usual time, prepared to feed on the young plant, will starve before it develops to the point where they can find sustenance. At all events, the actions of the market, with its frequent variations in price, show that speculators seem to think that it is too early to kill the crop, and as there is no anticipatory buying of cotton goods, the mills are without any inducement to purchase for future delivery. Many of them in fact, are said to be trying to sell their surplus stocks in order to avoid the loss represented by the discount at which new crop deliveries are quoted. It is nevertheless true, however, that the Government report made the trade receptive to small crop estimates, and it may be difficult for the bears to establish in the minds of speculators and the trade a feeling that the ultimate yield will be large enough to supply the requirements of the new cotton year. This makes many traders confident that crop scares and bulges of perhaps sensational proportions may be in store this season. Georgia, in addition to fighting boll weevil, will use probably 6 to 10 percent more fertiliser this year than last, and reports the labor situation better in the state.

Meantime there has been no improvement in the goods trade and mill curtailment is increasing. There has been some talk of a general curtailment in the New England district, to be followed, on reopening, by the offer of lower wages. Thus far the workers have successfully resisted wage cuts, but with business so slow, and mill dividends reduced, or abolished, it is felt that labor should bear some of the burdens now being assumed by the mills and their stockholders. One Southern cotton man says he expects to see early new crop buying by spinners unusually light this season, believing that they will adopt a policy of letting the producer or co-operative associations finance and hold the crop to a greater extent than ever before in history. There may be a change in this new policy, however, if later in the year it becomes clearly demonstrated that the crop is to be a really small one compared with world requirements this year. Some believe there is very little trade short interest left, judging by the actions of Southern spot markets since the filling of May commitments. They have been quiet, with the better grades firmly held and indications of an earlier basis for lower grades. Foreign advices reaching firms here indicate that in a general way, European mills are as heavily overstocked with raw cotton in comparison with the present demand for goods, as are American mills. At Bremen, Havre and Liverpool there are considerable quantities of cotton held on consignment, for which there is no urgent demand, and buying movement of six or eight weeks ago apparently filled up the needs of foreign spinners.

A report on the domestic yarn situation says there are some aspects of the market that seem encouraging, although the outlook is far from bullish as curtailment of production has been very drastic during the last month and promises to be even more so, except for a few numbers stocked heavily by Southern spinners.

There has been no feature to exports other than the moderate shipments to Russia, which have brought the exports to that country up to about 100,000 bales for the season, which is the first time any cotton has been shipped there since the war.

Weather Reports

July 7.—Barometric maximum between Kiusiu and the Bonin. The depression shown to the East of the Ballintang Channel tends to pass between Formosa and Luzon. Cyclonic circulation in the depression. Silk Market

Messrs. William Little and Co., Ltd., state in their silk report dated July 4:

Our last report was dated 27th inst.

There has been a little more doing here and there in White Silk but we are far off from any general enquiry.

There has been quite a good business in Steam Filatures and advances asked are general which is checking enquiry. Tussah Filatures have experienced one of their customary leaps and are up Tls. 60.

Cables from Japan are more encouraging. Shenshu No. 1 is quoted Yen 1,550 with a firm market.

Tsatlee Filatures.—Buffalo, A. B. Tls. 800 av. (old) Kung Kee Mars. 1 Tls. 760.

Tsatlee New Style.—Hoong Fu Yuen 1 and 2 Tls. 905 av. Sea Pagoda 1 and 2 Tls. 850 av. Sheep and Flag 1 and 2 Tl. 850 av. (old).

Steam Filatures.—There has been a considerable demand and medium grades are up Tls. 40 with higher rates asked in some instances, but there seems little disposition generally to follow up the rise.

Tussah Filatures 8 end.—Best grades have advanced from Tls. 560 av. to Tls. 620 and are firm.

The U. S. Political Situation Becomes More Mixed

SEVERAL weeks ago a statement was made in these columns of The China Press that the political situation in the United States in respect to the national election this fall was considerably muddled and there was quite likely to be "something doing in a large, exciting, exclamatory, explosive, objurgatory, and maynap, destructive and revolutionary political way."

The news of the last few days has served to prove the truth of this forecast, for the Democratic National Convention has been deadlocked for many long, weary and hot days and (as these lines are written) has been unable to nominate a candidate. McAdoo, who is radical and dry, and apparently has the support of the Ku Klux Klan, has had the lead but has been unable to win over to his side sufficient votes to gain the necessary two-thirds majority for the nomination. Govenor Al Smith, of New York, who is mildly wet and since he is a Catholic has the suppurt of the anti-Klan forces, has likewise been unable to obtain the cherished 729 delegates necessary for the nomination.

And now, added to the above, we have Senator La Follette of Wisconsin accepting the nomination of the Progressive Party for the Presidency on a platform which "sympathises with the aspirations for freedom and independence of Ireland, favors public ownership of railroads, restoration of the excess profits taxes, lowering of the tariff, creation of Government marketing corporations, abolition of injunctions in labor disputes, control of the meat-packing industry and common international action to bring about the economic recovery of the world from the effects of the war."

No one, after reading the summary of the Republican platform published in these columns yesterday, would accuse the Republican Party or its candidates of being radical. The platform displays liberal ideas in spots, but whether this will be sufficient to hold in line the discontented political sentiment in such States as Minnesota, Iowa, the Dakotas or Montana is extremely problematical and much more problematical now that La Follette has definitely decided to head a third party ticket.

Senator La Follette presented his platform to the Republican Convention at Cleveland and was turned down. Then he waited until the Democrats got into a deadlock at New York and right in the midst of it announced his acceptance of the offer of the candidacy for President extended by the new Progressive Party. La Follette knows perfectly well that he has no hopes of winning the Presidency of the United States in the election next November, but he also knows equally well that he probably can play havoc with the fortunes of the Republican Party through cutting down its normal majority. Under normal conditions, there are many more Republicans in America than there are Democrats: In the last national election, Harding, a Republican, won with a plurality of practically 9,000,000 votes.

And, to add further to the complications, the La Follette-Progressive Platform contains a declaration favoring independence for Ireland. This is a direct stab at a vulnerable point in the Democratic armor for the good reason that most of the Irishmen in America are Democrats. No one ever accused La Follette of not being a good politician or a good campaigner!

So to sum up the situation before definitely knowing who the Democratic candidate is to be, we have the Republicans bidding for the popular vote on a generally conservative platform which will appeal to the business and financial Eastern States and also to the industrialised Middle Western States such as Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. As the authors of the recent immigration law containing Japanese exclusion, the Republicans will have better than a fighting chance in the West or Pacific Coast States. The Democrats are sure of the "Solid South," and, with a progressive candidate, will make inroads into the normally Republican North and West. La Follette and his Progressive Party may carry such States as Wisconsin, the Dakotas, Iowa, Minnesota and Washington. Then there are a number of "doubtful" States such as Arizona, Colorado, Delaware, Idaho, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada and New Mexico.

The general result of all this uncertainty may be to prevent any candidate from receiving a majority in the electoral college, which would have the effect of throwing the election into the House of Representatives, where the voting is by States. And this presents the possibility that the House of Representatives, as at present constituted, may in turn be unable to elect owing to the fact that many of the State delegations in the House are split between the Republicans and Democrats and thus would be unable to vote at all. In case a deadlock resulted in the House, the Senate would then ballot for Vice-President and the candidate receiving the highest vote would be declared President of the United States. Here Senator La Follette would have his real opportunity, for, in co-operation with the progressive independents, he would control the situation and thus be in a position to dictate the election of the next President.

The New Trademark Law

WE would direct the attention of readers to an accurate list published in another part of the paper today of registrations and applications complete up to June 30 in connection with the new Trademark Law. The list shows the American and British firms that have registered or applied for registration according to the official Trademark Gazette. The growing list of applicants would seem to indicate that the opposition hitherto maintained is falling away, as it is not easy to see that there is anything to be gained by a vain beating of the air. One powerful incentive to registration by foreign merchants is the introduction of specific penalties for infringement by Chinese of foreign trademarks, a piratical practice that strikes at the very root of unfettered business operations in this part of the world. Hitherto, there has been no provision in any code of Chinese law dealing with the infringement of trademarks, other than a Supreme Court decision which says that such cases shall be accorded treatment according to the principles of justice. Now, of course, the question is written in detail into the law of the land, and provided that the Chinese Government carries out the new law both in the letter and in the spirit it will be entitled to the gratitude of both foreign and Chinese merchants of the class that is above trickery in the conduct of their business and expect the same scrupulous regard for commercial honesty from their rivals.

Inasmuch as there seems to be considerable confusion concerning the trademark situation in China, a few salient facts and a bit of history may not be out of place at this point. The Treaties of 1902 and 1903 concluded by China with Great Britain, Japan and the United States indicate that China undertook to proclaim regulations having the force of law for the protection of foreign trademarks in China, but some misunderstanding has arisen in connection with the "registration" by the Maritime Customs. This so-called "registration" was undertaken by the Superintendents of Northern and Southern Trade only as a temporary measure, pending the establishment of registration offices by the Chinese Government. The filing of trademarks with the Customs has not been "a registration" in the technical sense of the term but merely a recording for purposes of future reference. The wording of the Customs Notification on this point is quite clear. It said: "Pending the coming into force of the regulations governing the registrations of trademarks in China, you are informed that x x x x x x x x x has been temporarily filed in the archives of this office under reference Nos....." Thus the protection enjoyed by foreign trademarks in China has not been derived from any recording or provisional registration by the Maritime Customs but from agreements in force under treaty between the Powers concerned and China, and between foreign Powers themselves regarding mutual protection of their marks. From the beginning, the Powers were not satisfied with this "recording" by the Customs and they kept pegging away at it until the Chinese Government passed its new trademark law in May of last year, which has been fruitful of such strenuous opposition and not a little misunderstanding.

It will be remembered that on December 1 last the Diplomatic Body sent a Note to the Chinese Government requesting a general assurance that the new trademark law would not operate in any manner detrimental to foreign Treaty Rights. No reply having been received to this Note up to January 28, 1924, the Diplomatic Body on that date sent another Note to the Chinese Government giving three considerations and an essential condition under which, if granted, the foreign Powers would be prepared to recognize the new trademark law. The three considerations and the essential condition were as follows:—

(1) That Article 10 of the law, giving the Trademark Bureau the right to apply for a change of representatives applying for registration, was too arbitrary and should be abolished.

(2) That the services of a foreign expert should be employed by the Bureau.

(3) That the Trademark Gazette should publish fully and expeditiously all registrations and all details connected therewith and that the same should be accompanied by a translation in English.

The essential condition was that the period for registration should be extended so as to give six clear months from the date on which the trademark law should be formally recognised by the Powers.

The present position relative to the trademark situation in China is that while the foreign Powers have not recognised the new law, foreign firms may register if they feel so inclined, but the trademark law will not free China from her treaty obligations to protect foreign trademarks. The acceptance by the Chinese Government of the three considerations and the essential condition laid down by the Diplomatic Body in Peking is, therefore, the only question now pending which prevents the acceptance of the trademark law by the foreign Powers. It is apparent, therefore, that the obstacle to the recognition of the trademark law by the foreign Powers concerns a few details only in respect to the law and it seems to be only a question of time when these details will be adjusted. Subject to the requisite safeguards for foreign merchants, there is no reason why the new trademark law should not be beneficial to those doing business in this country.

EXCERPTS FROM GREAT WRITERS

YOUR COMPETITOR

Your competitor is not necessarily your enemy. He can be your friend.

A common mistake is that there is just so much business to be had, and that the rival cuts your trade in half.

That is not true. As a rule, the more tradesmen, the more trade. A good, lively competitor will increase your custom.

Two first-class groceries in a block are better for both than a monopoly would be for either.

The place for a young lawyer to hang out his shingle is not a town where there are no lawyers, but a town where there are many, and good ones.

"Where the carrion is, there the eagles are gathered together." And where no eagles hover there is slim picking.

If you are a young graduate from a medical school, don't go to some forsaken neighborhood where there are no doctors; go where physicians flourish.

Competition does not kill trade. It builds trade, makes new trade, stimulates trade.

No one can get all the business possible in any community. His personality attracts some, repels others. There's always a lot of business for somebody else.

Don't shy from your competitor. Don't assume he's your foe. Get acquainted with him. You may learn something.

Don't knock your competitor. Don't encourage busybodies who bring you tales of him. Be a good sport. Play the game. Keep good-natured.

Beat your competitor if you can, but remember the surest way to beat him is to sell better goods, to use fairer methods, and to be more courteous.

Don't play the cut-price game with him. Keep your margin of profit fair. Cutting prices is cutting the throat of success.

If your competitor lies about you, or uses underhand means to harm you, never mind. You go on and be on the level and look pleasant. You can't fool the people all the time. Straight business wins out in the long run.

There's business enough for you both. Go after it.

Your competitor will do you a deal of good. He will make you energetic, careful, more attentive to affairs, and altogether he will bring money to your pocket if you use him right.

Why They Love Borah

By John W. Owens (In The New Republic)

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, is one of the foremost men of public life, as very many of those in intimate touch with our public life believe, not because he is eloquent, there being many other eloquent men; not because he has a fine mind, there being many other fine minds; not because he is a patient, untiring student, there being many other patient, untiring students; not because he is courageous, there being many other courageous men, our frequent hasty judgments to the contrary notwithstanding. Senator Borah is a leading figure, in the opinions of many competent judges, because, beyond any other man in public life, he labors unwearied and undiscouraged, to produce a supply of statecraft that will meet the demand of this nation and of the world.

Politically, the American people "keep coming on," discovering evils and seeking cures with few lapses into indifference (on that sceptics and scoffers, and the children of faith and light will agree!) and none is so quick to discover an evil and none so quick to seek a cure as Borah. Never does he lapse into the indifference that sometimes damns the mass. The maximum of the server of the mass is his minimum. Nearly two decades in the disillusioning, disheartening, deadening atmosphere of Washington have aged only his body. His spirit goes marching on, increasingly agile it seems, in the twin quest for evils and for cures; increasingly ardent in the conviction that it is worth while—that mankind can and will effect a net gain of ours over evils, however it may stumble and falter. He cannot be convinced that the demand for the good must forever exceed the supply.

Born in '65 in the yet new Illinois, whence he moved on to Kansas and on to the wilds of the Idaho of a generation ago, Senator Borah is of the breed that expects to tame the world and all therein—a surcharged specimen of the breed. Had nature fashioned him for a materialist, he would have disemboweled the earth and harnessed its energies, or gone broke in the effort. But that was not her mood and intent in the hour of his fashioning. She sent him forth a preacher, and he must dig out the sins of organisec society, and he must nourish, organise and direct the aspirations of men for the good. He is apart in the Senate, not alone because he has a craving for solitude and meditation that makes itself known to his associates, but because of this essential quality.

Looking down on him from the gallery, noting that queerly emphatic apartness, the question bobs up: Where would he be, if he were not there? To find a wholly satisfactory answer a century must be turned back. Put Borah on a lean horse, pull his hat down over his eyes as he likes to have it, give him saddlebags containing a Bible and another shirt, start him over the hills of a new country as circuit-riding minister of the gospel.

Thrust upon the stage of a world far different, mankind still is his pride to be sought with every energy. View him in the company of the whole group that defeated the League of Nations Covenant in the Senate. He is the one man of that group who felt an affirmative responsibility. Lodge, Reed, Johnson, Brandegee, Moses? Their work was done when the Covenant was rejected. They were through. It was enough that the country had been kept from making what they held to be a mistake. No obligation was upon them to be more than negative. But Borah, having denied the efficacy of the instrument made by Wilson, no sooner had made sure that the denial was consummated than he affirmed the necessity of an instrument for the same purpose, and proceeded indefatigably to search for it. As I recall, he was the first member of the Senate openly to denounce Wilson's proposal; and for three years he has occupied Wilson's old place as the apostle of peace.

He cannot think in impersonal terms of persons; he cannot think of France, or Germany, or Russia, or England without seeing millions of human beings, happy or unhappy, comfortable or distressed. When a nation is hungry, he sees women and children, hands outstretched for food. When a nation is without fuel, he sees shivering babies.

He will go on, preaching peace and seeking the instrument to effectuate what he believes to be the will for peace. He can do no other. He will change his arguments and he will change his mind, probably, about instruments, but some argument and the search for some instrument will go on until his eyes are closed for the last time. That will be his unflagging contribution of supply to meet the world demand. Interspersed will be his contributions to meet the national demand. The railroad problem of today, and that of the year after next; the agrarian problem of today and that of the year after next; the problem of corrupt practices in politics, of topheavy government at Washington, of what not: these problems will keep him sweating and striving as earnestly as though the solution of last year's problems had not immediately caused new ones.

Stop gathering a supply to meet the demand? Adjust the demand to the supply on hand? Ask what is the use of trying to make things better? Not so long as Borah is Borah. And so long as Borah is Borah, when he rings the bell, a large section of the American people will answer. For he and they are one.

Dont Cultivate A Talent For Self-Deception

BY GARRETT P. SERVISS

"If I fill a tumbler with water and drop nails into it carefully one at a time, I can fill it with nails without removing so much as a drop of water. Why is this possible?—A. H."

Upon second thought I have rescued your question from the waste-basket, because it occurs to me that it offers an opportunity to point out, with the aid of an example, two things that lie at the basis of a great deal of trouble, disappointment, and failure in the life of ours.

The two things are first—inaccurate and uncritical observation; and second—inaccurate and uncritical use of language.

This nails-in-water story is of the same nature as the fish-in-water story which, in essentials, it resembles. People will tell you that they have put fish into a globe, or a pail of water without, to their surprise, increasing the total weight; also without causing the water to overflow, although the receptacle was full of water to begin with. I am sure that, in many cases, those who make these statements have really tried the experiments and honestly deceived themselves. Some persons seem to have a talent for self-decision. They owe it to just the two things that I have mentioned.

One cause of mal-observation and careless description is failure to notice and allow for little things; also failure to take note of everything concerned. Another, no less important, is the habit of "lumping things." You say that you "fill the tumbler" with water. Are you sure that it is brimming full? Then you say you "fill it with nails." Well, how many nails do you put in? Have you measured and computed the volume of each nail, and the aggregate volume of all of them? It may seem "full of nails" when the total space occupied by them is but a small fraction of the volume of the tumbler. It must be so, indeed, because there is no miracle concerned, the nails do not absorb any water, and the water is not compressed.

But there is a very interesting and instructive phenomenon which you seem to have overlooked. I can tell you about it because I have played the nail game myself. It is true that you can drop in an astonishing number of small nails in a tumbler that is full of water to the brim without causing an overflow. But if you set the tumbler on the edge of a table and get down on your knees so as to bring your eyes on the level of the top of the tumbler, you will see the water rising with a convex border above the brim and slowly swelling higher as you drop in nail after nail, and if you keep on long enough at last the heaped-up water will break across the brim and flow down outside the glass. You should have the brim perfectly dry to get the best effects. It is the "surface tension" between the water and the dry brim of the tumbler that holds up the tiny flood.

Now, the fact that the water does thus swell above the brim as the nails are dropped in ought to be sufficient to make you see that the nails are forcing the water to rise by occupying its place, while the fact that so many nails can be dropped in before there is a break-over should lead you to reflect that the nails are very deceiving with regard to the actual volume that they occupy.

In fact, this deception is so great that if you begin with the water but little (almost imperceptibly to a careless eye) below the brim, you can put in so many nails that your statement that the tumbler is "full of nails" becomes plausible.

Consider the following facts: A tumbler with a brim three inches across has an area at the top of about seven square inches, and if the water swells up to a height of one-eighth inch, the space that it occupies equals seven-eighths of a cubic inch. Nature doesn't set these traps to catch us; we set them ourselves by stumbling with both eyes and brains. But sound common sense without much science is usually sufficient to save us from them.

Something To Think About

By Bruno Lessing

PUBLIC OPINION

There is an osteopath in New York who sends out circulars to advertise himself. The less said about his propaganda the better. One sentence in his latest circular, however, is worth noticing.

"Public opinion," he says, "is always right."

It is an idiotic statement to make and illustrates the man's mentality. The only reason for noticing it is that there are many people who share this belief.

"La donna e mobile.
"Qua plum' al vento!"

Thus begins Verdi's famous song, "Woman is fickle, like a feather in the wind." No better description could be given of public opinion.

It is like an erratic breeze; demagogues, charlatans and unsound business men steer their course by it. Sometimes, however, this breeze veers to another point of the compass too swiftly for the sailors to trim their sail. And then they are swamped.

Sometimes, of course, public opinion is right. If you keep plugging away at a target for a year you are bound to hit bull's eye some day. Public opinion on every conceivable phase of government, religion, economics, ethics and philosophy has changed so much and has covered so much ground that, at some time or other, it must have stumbled across the truth.

The great bulk of the public, you must always remember, is not educated, is not trained to clear thinking, is not conversant with the important facts of history which are all that we have to guide us in speculating upon the future, and, above all, is without sense of serious responsibility.

The opinion of such a bulk of humanity is more likely to be wrong than right.

As a rule, the public is kind-hearted. Its sympathies are easily aroused, particularly by an appeal of suffering. It is also capable of great generosity and of patriotism. But these are qualities of the heart and not of the brain.

The only opinions that can be right or that are at all worth while are based upon knowledge, understanding, study and painstaking investigation. These are in the realm of the mind.

Avoid the great blunder of believing that public opinion is right. Do not be misguided by the fact that the crowd is rushing in a certain direction. If you wait long enough it will rush back.

Form you own opinions. Let them be influenced by your reading, your investigation and your thinking. Not by the mob.

The Overall Sweater Presents a V-neck Front and Only Crossing Straps at the Back

The woman who is really skillful at knitting always finds diverting ways of making use of her handicraft. Others who knitted with frenzied speed during the war, laid down their knitting needles five years ago with the vow that they would never knit, purl, rib or set up another stitch again so long as peace prevailed.

Fortunately or unfortunately machines have been taught to do such excellent knitting that many times the machine-knitted fabrics and garments are really preferable to those knitted by hand. Certainly it is nothing detrimental to a garment that it is machine done.

Still, certain hand-knited things are much in demand. While cold weather prevailed there was a distinct demand among smart French women for very fine hand-knitted socks and stockings for sport wear, and hand-knitted scarfs are still admired. The hand-knitted sweater is not so usual as it was a few years ago, when every woman felt that to be supplied for the spring and summer she must have at least five or six hand-knitted sweaters. But there are hand-made sweaters and jackets that are distinctly smart.

The sketch shows a hand-knitted over-all sweater in three shades with two straps that cross in the back and button at the belt. It may be worn with open jacket or cape, or is quite smart worn without any other wrap. Above in the sketch is a knitted gray silk jacket sweater with a knitted scarf to match, checked with green.

Knitted gray silk jacket sweater, with scarf to match, checked with green. Below, over-all sweater knitted in three shades and fastened with straps across the back.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

BY MARY MARSHALL

THE REFRESHMENT HABIT

Really the eating of refreshments—those between-meal bites, the mid-morning cup of chocolate, tea in the afternoon, or the sometimes really substantial lunch served at five o'clock or at eleven at a card party—is largely a matter of habit.

Sometimes a good habit, sometimes a bad one. It all depends on what the result to you may be. If you are in perfect health, with a sound digestion and no overweight to your discredit, then the habit of eating refreshments at odd hours does you no harm. If you have a bad digestion, a bad complexion, if you are overweight or underweight, then these refreshments are probably bad for you.

If you are overweight, then you may be pretty sure you are eating too much, and between meals are possibly the worst of your offenses. If you are underweight, then your between meals should be prescribed by a doctor or dietician, and should more probable consist in a glass of milk and French pastry.

Afternoon tea is doubtless the sanest of the regulation refreshments. For a cup of hot tea is stimulating and restful, and comes at a time of day when most of us can well stand a little boost to spirits and strength. And afternoon tea may be as sensible a meal as you wish to make it. Crisp toast and clear, weak tea, if you wish. Or plain bread and butter with your tea. At all events it need not be too rich.

Books And So Forth

By Frederic F. Van de Water (F. F. V.)

New York, June 5.—One of the features of the National Outdoor Sports Exposition is, we understand, a fish pond from which one may yank brook trout for 50 cents apiece.

We don't object to this form of entertainment on the ground of cruelty. As a matter of fact, we don't imagine that it hurts a trout as much to be hauled out of a tank as to be hooked from a stream. Our sympathies are not concerned in the least, but what few remnants of Rousseauism we still possess are deeply offended. If fishing is on the verge of becoming systematised and professionalised, it's time for us to start digging the only home we ever expect to own outright.

She who is known variously as Romance and Fortune and Chance has been gradually despoiled of her possessions by civilisation. One by one, she has lost her provinces. Territory, once completely under her haphazard sway, has been preempted and regulated and stripped of its glamour and made efficient. Existence, which was once largely a matter of luck, has been robbed of almost all thrills and has been made obedient to formulae evolved by physicians and insurance companies and institutes. Wealth, once largely dependent upon chance, has become something which any one may attain by the gordid process of putting away a certain amount each week of his life. Even diseases, with a few exceptions, have been brought under human control.

The way of the eagle in the air is no longer a mystery. It has become the science of aviation. The way of the ship in the midst of the sea has no more glamour and much less uncertainty than the way of the 4:10 on the New York, Susquehanna & Western. Even the way of a man with a maid has been codified, explained and systematised by Freud and his followers. Now, apparently, mankind is about to remove fishing from the dwindling kingdom of Fortune and put it on a business basis.

Humanity seems bent on obtaining the tranquil ease of certainty and eliminating the fierce joy of accident. Formulas and graphs and curves are hemming chance into a corner where eventually she will pine away, despoiled and impoverished. Only a few provinces still remain to her and these are rapidly being invested. Fishing belonged to her and now comes the 50 cents a fish fishpond. Mating was her property and now in Paris, we understand, a society has come into being which guarantees, in exchange for your fee, to supply you with a fitting helpmeet.

Presently, some one will devise a system whereby, on payment of a certain amount, you will receive a letter from an editor informing you that your story is exactly fitted to his needs. When that is done there will be nothing left in life to worry about or exult over.

The half-dollar trout pond is, of course, only an elementary substitute thus far, for the adventure of fishing. In time, however, science will re-create artificially all the adjuncts to that enterprise. Fishing houses will become as plentiful as Turkish baths and will possess a ritual even more complicated.

The science-dominated disciple of Izaak Walton who plans to go trouting will drop off at a fishing house on his way uptown after business, get into his fishing togs and go through the following ordeal:

(a) Mounting a treadmill, he will trudge along briskly. Attendants, standing about, will slap him across the face with tree branches, pour twigs and bits of bark into his rubber boots, drop beetles down his neck, entangle his rod in obstructions and increase his perspiration by a flood of artificial sunlight.

(b) Arriving at the end of his journey, he will be taken down from the treadmill, warned to walk quietly and conducted toward the artificial troutstream. During his progress attendants will thrust sticks between his feet, throw loops of bramble over his head, snatch off his cap and blow sparks into his face in lieu of black flies. Just before arriving at the fishing grounds he will be led into a carefully concealed mud hole.

(c) When finally attaining the edge of the stream he will be directed to stand upon a bowlder which will automatically tip and dump him into the water. If he still persists in fishing, a system of magnets will draw his hook to some obstruction each time he prepares to cast. If this is a particularly high-grade fishing house, mosquitoes will be furnished. If it is popular priced, gnats, which are hardier and more easily procurable, will be dumped over him instead. Muzzles will have been affixed to all the fish over the age of six weeks long. If one of these happens to slip his safeguard and actually rises to the fisherman's fly, an attendant will stand by to tangle or cut the line at the crucial moment.

(d) Another, longer term on the treadmill will follow the actual fishing. During this tramge a shower will be turned on. Before leaving the fishing house the angler may shop at the counter, where trout that have unhappily expired from natural causes may be purchased for the awe and admiration of his family.

He will also be able to buy affidavits concerning the proportions of the one that got away.
